

Miami Herald Travel Wires

Wednesday, 07.03.13

Current: 87°
90° / 77°
Weather | Traffic

Sunday
Miami Herald
Only 92¢
per week
Includes FREE
Poster

HOME NEWS SPORTS ENTERTAINMENT BUSINESS LIVING OPINION JOBS CARS REAL ESTATE SHOP CLASSIFIEDS

Health | Pets | Travel | Food & Wine | Home & Garden | Fashion & Beauty | Horoscopes

The Miami Herald > Living > Travel > Travel Wires

Posted on Monday, 06.24.13

A A email print comment

50th anniversary of Kennedy visit in Berlin is reminiscent of divided Germany

BY ANNE Z. COOKE
MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

BERLIN - It was 50 years ago, an old man's memory. But Berliners haven't forgotten the American president's visit in 1963, nor the speech that offered so much hope. A promise of support for West Germans living in Berlin's free but beleaguered American sector, they were heard around the world.

"Ich bin ein Berliner," said President John F. Kennedy, addressing 10,000 cheering West Berliners jammed into the square not far from the Wall. Those broad Bostonian vowels gave the words an extra zing. But the crowd, intent on the message, knew what it meant: America was one of them, allies who wouldn't forget their plight.

This summer, Berlin remembers the 50th anniversary of Kennedy's visit with a half a dozen special exhibits exploring Germany's unique relationship with the United States and the Cold War politics that pitted Soviet-run East Germany - also known as the German Democratic Republic - against West Germany. And nothing tells the story better than the Mauer (Wall) Museum, a few steps away from the Checkpoint Charlie border gate that once stood between the East and West.

This gate was important because Berlin wasn't on the border between the GDR and West Germany - the two countries that were a result of the country's division. The city was an island encircled by Soviet-controlled East Germany, making it an easy target for a hostile takeover. And the East Berliners who fled "west" weren't home free; they were still in Berlin, but in the free American sector. Thus, before the Wall was built in 1961, crossing over was a risky walk. Afterwards, the Checkpoint Charlie border crossing remained one of the few places where a fleeing East German didn't have to scale the wall or the "death zone" beside it. If you were clever enough, you might have been able to drive across.

"Communism in East Germany was worse than anywhere else," said Yaro Turek, who escaped from behind the Iron Curtain by hiking with his family over the mountains into Austria. "We didn't have it so bad in Czechoslovakia. If you said you were a member of the party you'd have a job and enough food. But communism in East Germany was much harsher, more repressive. When there were food shortages, it was the East Germans who starved. If you tried to leave, you'd be shot."

Touring the Mauer Museum recently, I remembered my parents' experience in 1970, when they applied for a permit to enter East Germany to visit cousins in Leipzig. They waited at the border crossing, being eyed by suspicious guards. They were detained at the guard shack while armed soldiers searched their car, a routine that anyone trying to cross over could expect.

Pulling out the luggage, the guards checked under the spare tire, knocked on the side panels and removed the rear seat cushions. Inside the shack, a stony-faced officer spent long minutes examining their entry permit and passports and confiscating newspapers, magazines and books.

"He found the gift box of chocolates we'd bought for Gert and Johanna and opened it," said my mother, still incensed after 45 years. "He took off the wrapping and lifted the tissue paper, and he even had the nerve to eat a couple of them. As if I'd hide something in a bonbon."

The questions were predictable, the rules inflexible. Why did the Americans want to enter the GDR? Who were they visiting? Had anyone asked them to deliver packages? Were they aware that spying was a capital crime? Did they know that they had to change American dollars for East German marks, register at the police station upon arrival, and stay in a government-approved motel?

This is where my parents - brave, or more likely, innocent - balked.

"Henry put his foot down," said my mother. "Johanna had a bedroom waiting for us and he wasn't going to disappoint them. So we went straight to their house and never heard another word about it."

Today, Berlin is new, alive and moving forward, but remembering the country's rough past isn't easy. Even the Checkpoint Charlie guard shack - still in the middle of the street - has been reduced to a tourist attraction. A nearby photo exhibit, with grainy black-and-white photos, shows some of Germany's worst moments in history, including when Soviet tanks faced off with American soldiers, and the instances when the Cold War threatened to become more than lukewarm. At the shack itself - the spot where German escapees were shot and left to bleed to death - two men in phony guard uniforms charge tourists $10 for a photo. Behind them, under familiar golden arches, a McDonalds serves hamburgers and fries.

To experience the country's darker, divided years, snap a photo with the guards, and move on to the Mauer Museum - more popularly called the Checkpoint Charlie Museum. Privately-owned and operated, the museum houses a huge collection of artifacts and photos recording not just the city's most awful days, but man's unquenchable desire for freedom.

The exhibits, documenting the years between 1961 and 1989, are located in two old buildings. We spent the morning roaming inside, but it was not enough to take it all in. The museum space itself is epitome of the era and sets the disheartening, suffocating tone through the small rooms, narrow hallways and winding staircases.

In each little room, the walls are covered with black-and-white photos of wounded men crawling toward freedom, jubilant couples being reunited, yellowing letters between families separated by the wall, false birth certificates used to escape and real documents detailing persecution by the Stasi, the GDR's secret police.

Other compelling things to see are the dozens of ingenious solutions that East Germans dreamed up to escape. They folded themselves into minuscule spaces in cars and cement trucks, boxed and loaded themselves onto delivery vans and lay under hay bales. They forged passports and produced false identification papers. One bold man walked across the border, past armed East German guards, wearing the look-alike American military uniform that his fiancée, waiting in the Western sector, had sewn for him.

The Mauer Museum's small theater space shows a variety of films and newsreels, including one of President Kennedy's West Berlin speech. When you arrive, check the day's schedule. For more about this year's 50th anniversary celebrations, check out other exhibits, readings and special city tours planned in Berlin.

IF YOU GO:

From now through August, the "Kennedy In Berlin - Germany Trip 1963," exhibit will be at the Willy-Brandt-Haus, Berlin, which includes many never-before-seen photographs of the president by photographer Ulrich Mack, who accompanied Kennedy during his historic visit.

Web Search powered by R A E S

Search: Horoscopes | Comics & Games | Data Sleuth

AdChoices

Get the Deal!

$15 for 2 regular manicures
OR $35 for 2 shellac
manicures OR $20 for $40 of waxing services -- Miami
Beach

 $15.00
Buy Now!
Value: $30
Discount: 50%
You Save: $15

dealsaver.com

MORE TRAVEL WIRES

- Carmel: a sweet West Coast getaway
- Clueless in Ucluelet: Discovering Vancouver Island
- Romans feud over temple turned 'cat-acombs'
- See Detroit in a different light from a bicycle, by foot or funky bus
- Be happy as a clam at New Jersey's Long Beach Island
- At Ludlow's, guests get the best of resort life, plus tucked-away vintage cabins

More

VIDEOS

Like 0

Through June and beyond, the Kennedy Museum in Berlin remembers the President's visit with an exhibit that explores its purpose and political goals beyond the purely historical significance.

On June 23, a public picnic sponsored by the Militarhistorisches Museum in Berlin (Museum of Military History) invites guests to experience the past by learning about the history of Berlin during the allied occupation and viewing the classic cars of the era. There is also a chance to meet and speak with eyewitnesses and veterans. The guest of honor will be Gail S. Halvorsen, Berlin airlift pilot who earned the nickname "the Chocolate Pilot."

From June 24-26, eyewitnesses of Kennedy's visit and speech are invited to join the celebration at the Schoneberg City Hall (Rathaus Schoneberg). More than 10,000 Berliners still remember his speech, preserved by the Memory of the Nation Association (Das Gedachtnis der Nation). If you're were present at the speech or remember seeing Kennedy on a broadcast, you're invited to record your memory of the event in a video interview. All interviews will be made available in an online archive.

For additional and future events scheduled throughout 2013 and into 2014 (the 25th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall), go to www.visitberlin.com or www.berlin.de/kennedy.

Trending: View comments

READ MORE TRAVEL WIRES STORIES FROM THE MIAMI HERALD

Carmel: a sweet West Coast getaway

Cueless in Ucluelet: Discovering Vancouver Island

Trending Offers and Articles

ADVERTISEMENT

Approaching Obama scandal could bring shame to the White House not seen since President Clinton.

Surprisingly simple solution to help your joints. See why these ingredients are flying off shelves

If you had a medical crisis, would you be covered with proper insurance?

The End of Obama? Approaching scandal could change the White House Administration overnight...

Get the 5-Minute Herald VIA EMAIL

Enter email address

Sign Up

GET Sunday's Miami Herald SUBSCRIBE - 92¢ PER WEEK!

Join the DISCUSSION

The Miami Herald is pleased to provide this opportunity to share information, experiences and observations about what's in the news. Some of the comments may be reprinted elsewhere on the site or in the newspaper. We encourage lively, open debate on the issues of the day, and ask that you refrain from profanity, hate speech, personal comments and remarks that are off point. Thank you for taking the time to offer your thoughts.

The Miami Herald uses Facebook's commenting system. You need to log in with a Facebook account in order to comment. If you have questions about commenting with your Facebook account, click here.

Have a news tip? You can send it anonymously. Click here to send us your tip - or - consider joining the Public InsightNetwork and become a source for The Miami Herald and el Nuevo Herald.

HIDE COMMENTS

SPONSORED RESULTS

- Turn $200 to $2500 Join my trading team - free. I'll show you how to turn $200 to $2500. BinaryBankroll.com
Top Work From Home Jobs Read our reviews. We make working at home easy. WorkAtHomeTruth.com
Raspberry Pill Melts Fat? Celebrity Doctor Exposes One Weird Fruit That Melts Your Fat Fast... PureRaspberryKetone

- NEWS SPORTS ENTERTAINMENT BUSINESS LIVING OPINION CLASSIFIEDS SERVICES Site Map +

RSS | My Yahoo | My Yahoo Newsletters | Mobile | Alerts | Twitter

Terms of Service | Privacy Policy | About our ads | Copyright | About The Miami Herald | About the McClatchy Company | Corrections | Contact Us | Advertise | Work for Us

Partners: El Nuevo Herald | Newspaper in Education | WLRN | Miami Herald News | CBS4 WFOR-TV | More

Copyright 2013 Miami Herald Media Co. All rights reserved

Tweet 0

VIDEO

Like 0

» More video

ON FACEBOOK

Add a comment...

Facebook social plugin

QUICK JOB SEARCH

Enter Keyword(s) Enter City Select a State Select a Category Search

Advanced Job Search Search by Category powered by careerbuilder.com

Ads by ZINC

Loading ...