Students to sing in Japan

The Youth Choir of Central Oregon is headed to Japan next summer to perform in celebrations gearing up for the 2020 Summer Olympics being held in Tokyo.

Members of the youth choir of Central Oregon's Premier Choir, the upper-level group comprised of local high school singers, will be performing alongside Japanese choirs in July 2017.

"This opportunity came up, and we were thrilled," said Chris Asher, the executive director of the Youth Choir of Central Oregon.

Henry Leck, the artistic director of Perform International, the organization behind the tour, invited the choir to Japan. Leck has a longstanding musical relationship with the choir and has accompanied the group on previous international tours.

The students will participate in daily rehearsals and performances, culminating in a final performance directed by Henry Leck and Robyn Lana, also an artistic director at Perform International.

For more information or to schedule an audition for the upcoming choral season, visit www.ycco.org or call 541-385-0470.

Protected bike lane demo

Bend Bikes is teaming up with the Bend Livability Project at the Future Fair Art Walk this Friday to draw attention to biker safety in Bend by constructing a protected bike lane prototype open to the public.

The protected bike lane is part of Bend City's Safer by Design campaign, whose goal is to create a safer traveling climate for walkers, bikers and drivers alike. Starting at NW Greenwood Avenue and Bond Street, the bike lane, 1 mile in length and separated from traffic lanes by cones, will connect downtown Bend and Marker's District with a safe bikeable route.

"It will give everyday bicycle commuters the chance to experience what it feels like to be separated from automotive traffic by either cones or parked cars," said Lucas Freeman, Bend Bike's board president. "We're really excited about where this could lead."

Bikers are invited to try out the new lane from 5 to 9 p.m. and offer their feedback to Bend Bike volunteers who will be waiting at the end of the route with a survey.

For more information and to see a map of the protected bike lane, go to www.BendBikes.org.

Feedback sought on dementia care

A growing number of long-term care facilities specialize in care for people with Alzheimer's disease and dementia. The Bulletin wants to hear about your experience with these facilities, whether you've reviewed and visited many while trying to place a relative or only made casual visits. What did you learn? Roam around at Fishing Camp in

Colorado's last best wilderness

By Anne Z. Cooke • Tribune News Service

LAKE GEORGE, Colo. —

"If you've tried three flies and still haven't hooked one of these guys," said Scott Tarrant, wading farther out into the Tarryall River, "remember what the old-timers say. Foam is home. Follow the bubbles."

"Sounds like a beer drinker's election slogan to me," said Josh, the group's self-appointed comedian, peering into the ripples swirling around a fallen tree trunk.

"Bet they weren't fly fishermen, either," said Scott, camp manager at Fishing Camp, a fishing lodge in Colorado's South Park, three hours from Denver. "Fishermen would know that a line of bubbles is where two currents meet. It's like a conveyor belt sweeping fish and floating insects together."

Crossing the river that morning, off for an early run in the Lost Creek Wilderness, I was thinking more about Kit Carson and Jim Bridger than I was about trout. Best known of the fur trappers and mountain men that explored the Rocky Mountains in the early decades of the 1800s, Carson and Bridger camped in the "mountain paradise" they called South Park and knew it well.

But if it hadn't been for an invitation to a wedding at the historic Broadmoor Hotel, in Colorado Springs, I wouldn't have been at Fishing Camp at all. Without my dad along, hiking to our favorite mountain streams, learning which fly to use and how to spot the eddies where the trout lurked, fishing wasn't the same.

Especially memorable were his stories, full of boyhood recollections about lake fishing in Wisconsin. There was the time he struggled to haul a bass into the rowboat and a mean-looking snapping turtle suddenly lunged up and grabbed it, nearly taking off his finger. Or the one about the raccoon family that poached the pail of bluegills he'd left outside for no more than 10 minutes.

After he was gone, the rods and reels

Steve Haggerty / Colorworld

"When you hear the rod singing" — with a trout on the line — "it's the gods celebrating all your hard work," says guide Steve Gossage. BELOW: South Park, the "wilderness paradise" where so many mountain men wintered over in the late 1830s, remains mostly undeveloped.

went back in the closet for good. Five years later, the wedding invitation arrived. And with it came two nights at the legendary Broadmoor, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, a luxury vacation destination popular since the hotel opened in 1918.

Which is where I learned about the Broadmoor's newest venture, three backcountry camps inspired by the hotel's new owner, Philip Anschutz, a student and admirer of western traditions and history. With the Rocky Mountains right there in the hotel's backyard, the time was ripe for offering the kind of authentic wilderness and ranch experiences that adventuresome travelers say they want.

Ohio rock stacker has own reasons for creative hobby

By Paula Schleis
Akron Beacon Journal

AKRON, Ohio — It's not a Zen or chi thing, Ed Cote insisted.

Not art. Not therapy. Not even especially a skill, he will tell you.

He said this as he hoisted a 40-pound rock, tipped it lengthwise and nestled a pointy end into a dimple on a partially buried bolder.

When he let go, the rock almost appeared to be hovering in place, like an elephant doing a single-toed handstand.

Then he looked around his feet for another rock, determined to add yet another layer to an already-improbable balance.

"I'm not looking at what's possible. I start by thinking what's impossible, and work backward," Cote laughed.

"Then I'm like, 'Holy crap, I can't believe that stood up.'"

Spend a little time with the 55-year-old and you'll find there is, after all, a profound experience associated with rock stacking: It's a form of human communication.

It's the reason he took his hobby from his South Akron front yard to public parks, festivals, art walks and community gardens. He loves to share his passion, loves to see the surprise on faces of strangers, loves to encourage skeptics to give it a try.

So if you spot him squatting over a pile of rubble in the creekbed of some park, don't be afraid to ask for a lesson.

The Tarryall River, flowing through grassy meadows south to low hills and rock formations, meets the South Platte River north of Lake George, Colorado.

Pools and rapids on the 40-mile-long Tarryall River offer a variety of fishing adventures.

Colorado

Accordingly, the Ranch at Emerald Valley, a cowboy-style outfit at 8,200 feet in the Pike National Forest, was the first to open in 2013. Cloud Camp, at 9,200 feet on Cheyenne Mountain, opened the following year in 2014. But for Anschutz, who told me he discovered Colorado during the summer vacations his parents organized, the idea of re-creating an old-time fishing lodge, with a big front porch, pine plank floors, rustic log cabins to bunk in and family-style dinners, must have been percolating.

And there it remained, according to a spokesman in Anschutz's office, until the he was out for a drive and spotted an abandoned log cabin on a former homestead in South Park, the grassy valley that western scholar and author Bernard DeVoto called a mountain man's "paradise, the last place in the mountains where the old life could be lived to the full." When a little digging indicated that the cabin, on 76 acres, was not only next to one of Colorado's top-rated trout streams but that 5 miles of the river frontage was private land, Fishing Camp became a reality.

For all its connections with the Broadmoor, Fishing Camp is wonderfully rustic, the kind of place where everyone feels at home. But spartan it isn't. The main lodge, originally a homesteader's cabin, is now restored, rebuilt, reinked, reroofed, enlarged and insulated. The lighting and electricity have been upgraded to current standards. Bigger windows let in light and an improved pine board floor resists muddy boots.

Tapestry-sized Navajo rugs hang on the walls, surrounded by last century's western memorabilia: snowshoes, buckets, cowboy hats, antlers, several mounted fish, a decoy ducks, period lanterns, antique fishing rods, a collection of woven wicker creels and a canoe and paddle, the last propped overhead on the rafters.

Seven small log cabins, each different and sleeping two to eight guests, have also been updated, with new chinking and insulation. The door frames are old, the doors and screens are new. The rooms were small; the new rooms have been rearranged to add more space. Upgraded lighting, comfy sofas and chairs and framed 1930s magazine ads, promoting rods and reels, continue the theme. Some cabins have private baths; three of the smallest — like so many 1950s and '60s wilderness camp — share a single bathroom. As for the wood frame screen door on my cabin, it swung shut with a comfortable "thunk."

With a limit of 22 guests at any one time, Fishing Camp's isolation, at the foot of the Lost Creek Wilderness, and its private stretch of river frontage really is "your father's fishing stream." You could spend all day walking along the bank, soaking up the scenery and the solitude. The fact is that the proliferation of highways, public parks, campgrounds and tourist trails have made distant trout streams more accessible, and therefore more crowded.

The bath house is a convenience for guests in Fishing Camp's two most rustic cabins.

Someone with an eye for authenticity decorated the lodge with furnishings guaranteed to whet the whistle of any western art collector.

Out of the water momentarily, this trout seems ready for its close-up.

For experts, the Taryall's turns and twists offer enough eddies, pools, snags and white water to challenge any skill level. And though Tarrant and his guides are catch-and-release sportsmen by choice, "Fishing Camp is a stream-to-table resort," he says. If you yearn for that old-time taste of wild rainbow trout just caught and fried in butter, just ask.

As for eager beginners, you won't be bored holding a rod and watching a fishing line that never wiggles. Tarrant, who can snare a trout nearly on command, is a repository of facts about the climate, stream action, native insects and when they fly, and what a trout thinks as it rests in a quiet eddy. Even after all these years, I learned how to cast more effectively with less effort (and without throwing out my shoulder) and to pay attention to what's hatching that day.

Clearly, luring a fighting rainbow onto a hook is what Fishing Camp is all about. But don't stay away just because you don't fish. Bring the family fisherman along, and while he/she is catching dinner, take the car and explore South Park.

Lost Creek Wilderness, in the Pike National Forest, spectacular and remote, adjoins Fishing Camp, on the Tarryall River.

Creative thinking produced this rod-and-reel lamp base for the main lodge.

If you don't want to hike, ask about four-wheel jeep trails into the Lost Creek Wilderness, where a network of trails goes from one photo op to the next: arresting rock formations, eagles' nests, marshy meadows, sage-covered sunny slopes and half-ruined pioneer cabin sites. Wannabe cowboys can take a guided horseback ride at Tarryall River Ranch, just off the highway, 3 miles south of Fishing Camp.

Also in the vicinity is a classic one-room school house, built in 1921, standing on the same site where its predecessor, built in 1898, once stood. Painted bright white, it perches on a small rise, a voice from a vanished age, like the fur trappers and like Ma and Pa in "The Little House on the Prairie" series of books, by Laura Ingalls Wilder. For the stories that paved the way for the Ingalls pioneering years, read Kit Carson and Jim Bridger's diaries, tales of South Park and beyond.

The nitty gritty

South Park is a region consisting of a series of meadows, streams and low peaks west of the Front Range of the Rocky Mountains and east of the Sawatch Range and Collegiate Peaks in Colorado. Linked by river valleys to Middle Park and North Park, also in Colorado, it provided a thoroughfare for fur trappers traveling from Taos, New Mexico, to Wyoming and Utah.

Fishing Camp, open April 1-Oct. 31, is located on Highway 77 in Park County, Colorado, between Jefferson and Lake George, 3.5 miles south of Tarryall Reservoir. Rates per night for two in a cabin start at about $800 and include lodging, chef-prepared meals, snacks, coffee and tea, wine and alcoholic beverages, all guiding services and use of all fishing gear. Half-day and full-day rates are also available. Book reservations at the Broadmoor Hotel, at 719-623-5112, or 844-602-3343, or go to www.broadmoor.com.

"Formula 2"
Nature's Answer to Healing Skin Fast

- Totally Natural
- No Harsh Drugs
- No Synthetic Chemicals

We have close to 100 testimonials, these are just a few:

• Maurice Laurin, California - This amazing formula cleared-up the prokeratosis on my feet. I had this skin condition for some time, and the oil worked very quickly to clear it up. The condition hasn't returned, and it has been quite a few months.

• Erin Clifford, California - I wanted to thank Sherry for making amazing products and for sharing her amazing knowledge. I have suffered with psoriasis on my legs. My legs looked absolutely awful when I saw Sherry for the first time. She had great ideas to help me manage my condition. First she suggested I soak my legs in Pink Himalayan Bath Salts one to two a week followed by Formula 2, which is very healing. These two items combined with 15 minutes of sun on my legs 3 times a week has made and continues to make an incredible difference. I can wear shorts and shirts again thanks to Sherry!

• Tisha Finnegan, Bend, OR - "I put Formula 2 and Tucuma Butter on a severe burn I had on my hand. Within 10 minutes the pain was gone. I applied both again at bedtime and when I woke I had no pain, redness, or blisters."

• Bonnie Miller, Bend, OR - I had stage 4 throat cancer and subsequent surgery and radiation. My throat and neck were burned. I used Formula 2 and the results were amazing. Within four days, my neck was so much better and within a week, the burned area was normal. It is truly an incredible product."
