

Jimmy Carter works to build a better world; cool new tech gear in today's Parade

Pizza for breakfast? Do it! c5

Before accepting your new home ...

On your final walk-through, here's what to look for. C5

Standard-Speak

Sunday, February 18, 2018 standardspeaker.com

Newsstand: $1.50

A TIMES-SHAMROCK NEWSPAPER

7-day home delivery: $4.60

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2018

TRAVEL

STANDARD-SPEAKER C7

Tavoro Waterfalls, in Bouma National Heritage Park, is one of Taveuni's top attractions. A $15 U.S. entrance fee pays the adjacent village for upkeep and services.

Inside-outside living can be found at Sau Bay's beachside bures, with front porches, air conditioning, mini-bars, and coffee makers in Vanua Levu, Fiji.

Sun pushes away wispy clouds above Beach Bungalow No. 1, at Tides Reach Resort, on Taveuni, Fiji's Garden Isle.

South Pacific paradise more than sand and sea

BY ANNE Z. COOKE
TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

TAVEUNI, Fiji — If Fiji was nothing more than sand and sea, palm fronds and flowers, it wouldn't matter which South Pacific beach resort you visited. Every vacation would be just another ho-hum adventure.

But after 16 years and as many visits to this 333-island nation, I've got a pretty good idea why each destination promises a unique experience. What's the secret? It's the Fijians themselves, proud to be Fijian and proud to show you their country.

Sau Bay Resort, on Vanua Levu, the second largest island, was the first stop on my most recent trip to Fiji. Still jet-lagged, I was sitting on the deck of the lodge, gazing over the bay, when the bushes below me suddenly stirred and two hands and a pair of clippers appeared, followed by a head.

Then the head looked up, saw my feet and without missing a beat asked me what I thought of the umbrella-like trees towering over the lodge. "This was my introduction to the owner, Nigel Douglas, a Scotsman by ancestry and a fifth-generation Fijian.

"These are rain trees," he said, affectionately patting a gnarled trunk. "I took one look and I knew this was the place for me. You don't often see them so close to the shore — saltwater, you know — but they're thriving. And look at these tiny white flowers. These bushes are rare, but native." He paused, scanning the hillside. "This was bare when we bought it. Carroll and I planted everything you see."

On Taveuni Island, Tides Reach guests are greeted with Fiji's signature drink: fresh coconut water.

"How did you ever find this spot?" I asked. "Coming across the bay, you can't see it."

"That's easy," he said. "Fiji is home. I've been to most of these islands, dived every reef. Anything you want to know, people, politics, gardens, just ask. Do you drink wine? Maybe later."

I'd already met Carroll, who emerged from her garden to show me Sau Bay's four ocean-view burees (BOOR-ays, i.e. cottages), each equipped with big beds, mosquito netting, private baths, coffee makers, a cooler jar and air conditioning.

Casual but courteous, the Douglasses know how to make travelers feel at home. On most mornings, Carroll worked at her desk while Dive-master Nigel suited up to guide the resort's six other guests to Rainbow Reef and the Great White Wall, 10 minutes away by dive boat.

That left precious private time, to kayak across the bay, hike uphill and (with assistant manager Sarah as guide) visit nearby Kioa Island, the adopted home of Polynesian immigrants from Tuvalu; rising oceans are washing away their villages.

Four days later it was time to leave Sau Bay this time to go to Tides Reach Resort, on Taveuni, Fiji's Garden Isle.

Expecting a clerk and a check-in desk, I was welcomed like royalty as the staff — 10 handsome Fijians — lined up with hearty "bulas" and firm handshakes.

"You must be thirsty," said bartender William Celua, eyes twinkling, big smile, handing me Fiji's traditional welcome drink, fresh coconut water topped with a flower.

Just four years old, Tides Reach is still growing, adding two burees and a dive shop later this year. The burees are sleek and simple, uncluttered white with minimalist furnishings and bold Asian and Fijian art. The main lodge, airy and spacious with two open-air sides, looks out over a sandy beach and the bluest of blue water.

"It's beautiful, isn't it?" said guest relations manager Paul Gonebeci, motioning me to a plump white sofa. "Let's sit for a minute, then I'll show you around," he said, handing me a list of possible activities.

"Some people don't want to do anything but relax," he added, nodding toward a guest on the beach, reading a book under an umbrella. "But you might want to see the waterfalls or the hiking trails, so we should pick a time you like."

With a free afternoon ahead, Gonebeci suggested snorkeling around Honey-moon Island, at the end of the bay. Following sports guide Niu Lebaivalu into water as clear as glass I had my first look at the coral damaged when Cyclone Winston roared over Fiji, in February 2016.

Clumps of newly grown coral, yellow, beige and red, looked healthy. But you couldn't miss the piles of dead coral ripped out by wind and waves. "It was a Category 5 storm, the worst one ever," Lebaivalu said. "The Pacific Ocean is warmer than it used to be."

On my last day at Tides Reach he invited me to his village, Wivi. A dozen small houses built in a circle, on 800 grassy acres, it's fringed by vegetable gardens and a coconut palm grove. Fetching a sulu (a wrap-around skirt) from the car, he handed it to me, blushing.

"Shorts are OK other places, but the chief is inviting us to his house to share a bowl of kava. It's traditional," he said. Prepared, I'd also brought kava for the chief, a gift bought an hour earlier at the corner market.

Yasawa Island Resort, in northwest Fiji, seemed a long way from Taveuni Island, in the east. But it was the last stop on my itinerary, and one of Fiji's top 10 luxury retreats. That made it worth the two short flights it took to get there.

And it was my second visit, so I knew what to expect: Total privacy among tall palms and landscaped gardens; luxurious thatched burees that feel Fijian but offer the latest in luxury; miles of clean white sand, sloping gently into deep water, with ocean views to the horizon.

Less obvious but more important is that Yasawa Resort is, in its own way, both western resort and Fijian village. Blending two cultures, it enchants and enlightens travelers and reminds the staff that they aren't just employees, but hosts.

Why does this matter? Because Yasawa Island Resort, like most Fijian beach resorts, occupies leased land, owned and controlled by the local chief and the clan. A warm partnership and shared traditions benefit both resort and village.

I did what I always do at Yasawa: I swam, organized a beach picnic up the coast, toured Bukama and visited

The nitty gritty

□ Sau Bay hosts small weddings, honeymooners, families and scuba divers. A la carte rates keep prices lower than its competitors. Cottages for two or more start at $225 per night; add $60 per day per person for meals; kids are welcome. Bottled drinks and guided outings cost extra. At www.saubay.com.

□ Tides Reach has been discovered by multi-family travelers. Villas for two start at $875 per night; the deluxe villa (for four) is $1,275. Rates include airport transfers, all meals, child care, kayaks, paddle boards, snorkel gear and on-site events. Guided tours and bottled drinks are extra. At www.tidesreachresort.com.

□ Yasawa Island Resort's rates per night are all-inclusive, except for alcoholic beverages. Listed rates start at $1,053 for two in a buree. Included are kayaks, paddle boards, other sports gear, tennis courts, Wi-Fi in public areas, non-alcoholic beverages and most guided outings: snorkeling, catamarans, sailing, half-day Blue Lagoon Cave trips, village tours and private beach picnics. www.yasawa.com.

the famous Blue Lagoon Caves, where you take a deep breath, swim under water through a narrow channel and pop up in a mysterious, sunlit pool.

And each evening, as the sun set over the yardarm, I joined my fellow travelers at my favorite pool-side bar, toasting our adventure amid palm fronds and flowers, and rehashing another day in paradise.

Millennials like rentals but prefer staying in hotels, survey finds

BY HUGO MARTIN
LOS ANGELES TIMES (TNS)

Short-term rentals such as Airbnb are hugely popular, particularly with millennial travelers, who are looking for a new experience.

But a new survey suggests that many younger travelers still prefer the safety and amenities of a hotel over a short-term rental. And with more millennials having children, that generation is likely to turn to hotels even more in the future, the study said.

When asked the type of accommodations they prefer, 35 percent of millennials who have traveled more than 75 miles in the past year chose upscale and luxury hotels and resorts, according to a report by Resonance Consultancy, which questioned 1,548 Americans between the ages of 20 and 36.

The second most preferred accommodation was camping with 33 percent, followed by short-term rentals in apartments or condos with 23 percent, the study found.

Another millennial preference: They like to avoid interacting with humans when arranging a trip. That may explain why Airbnb and other short-term rental sites are so popular. Hotel operators have noticed the proclivity and many have sped up the booking and check-in process, even replacing hotel lobby workers with kiosks.

Nearly two thirds of the millennials in the survey said they prefer booking on a travel website, with 47 percent preferring to book directly on a hotel or airline website. Only 24 percent say they prefer booking with a real-life travel agent, the study said.

"The less-human-interaction-the-better booking experience is now evolving to front desks," the study said. "In fact, some hotels are eliminating the front desk altogether."

PHOTO COURTESY OF SAU BAY RESORT; COURTESY OF TIDES REACH RESORT; COURTESY OF YASAWA ISLAND RESORT